

DoubleDone

A calmer kind of to-do.

Today is finite and achievable.

A daily to-do app for ADHD, autism, OCD, and chronic overwhelm. Built around how these brains actually work.

THE PROBLEM

Most to-do apps are built for a brain that isn't yours.

Capture more. Keep the streak. Turn red when you're late. For ADHD, autism, OCD and overwhelm, those patterns don't motivate. They repel.

Initiation paralysis the dreaded task is too big to begin.

Time blindness "today" quietly fills past what a day holds.

The discounting reflex the brain throws away everything it's done.

Rejection sensitivity guilt mechanics don't push, they make you leave.

THE ONE RULE THAT CANNOT BREAK

Never shame the backlog.

Celebrate finishing. Never punish a task for existing. No streaks, no overdue-red, no nagging. Undone work just rolls forward, quietly.

The deliberate opposite of streak-and-points apps.

TODAY

A home screen sized to be doable.

Today holds what today needs, not your whole list. A gentle gauge shows the weight of the day. The rest waits, calmly, with nothing marked late.

BREAK IT DOWN

Hand over the dreaded thing. Get back a first step.

You only ever hold one small piece. The whole task is tracked quietly behind it, and finishing the pieces finishes the thing itself.

☐ Bag the obvious rubbish 20 min · tomorrow

☐ Drop a box at the charity shop 30 min · Wed

Usually about 4 days, at a gentle pace. No rush.

THE LOOKBACK

Proof you can point to.

A calendar of everything you actually finished, the dreaded things included. The answer to a brain that discards its own wins. Not a stats page.

Each finished week becomes a calm AI keepsake.

UNDER THE CALM

Never-shame, enforced in the data model. Not just the copy.

Built in a week solo. React Native, Supabase, Cloudflare Workers, tiered Claude AI.

AI with judgment cheap models on easy paths, reasoning where it matters, propose-then-accept so it never rearranges your day for you.

Privacy by design local-first, anonymous-first. The only PII is an email, and only if you choose to sync.

Built for them not built by someone with ADHD, but with and for the people who have it. Designed from their real failure modes, not a feature list.

GOING DEEP, NOT WIDE

One answer per problem was just the start.

The hardest moments got more than one answer, built around how these brains actually stall.

Make it tiny	shrink a stuck task to a two-minute version, just to begin.
The low day	one tap recalibrates Today when you have less to give.
The wind-down	a gentle evening invite to close the day, never a nag.
Routines	a calm checklist that keeps no streak, so there is nothing to break.
Done is done	quiet reassurance for the OCD and perfectionism overlap.
